

ABSTRACT OF THE INVENTION

The present invention provides a method of altering the concentration or level of expression of a desired gene product in a recipient subject which involves administering to a recipient a transkaryotic cell capable of expressing a desired gene when the cell is present within the subject. The invention further pertains to compounds produced by such cells, by transkaryotic animals in response to such cells, and to the uses of such compounds.